Gem's main selling point is its price. To get the same paid app for almost half the cost, they have to offer a high level of value. It may be the cheapest paid app to download, but has a really clean UX. It does have a few quirks that some users may have difficulty with: It's available as a paid app only. It has a free trial, but sadly, no free or cheap version. And, if you do decide to pay a few bucks for the app, it may not integrate with Google Wallet and other popular wallet apps. In my opinion, this is just bad design. Gem does have in-app purchases, but some have been added, not removed, so you won't be charged twice if you aren't careful when adding a credit card. You do have the option to add your card manually via the app, though. The interface is clean and simple. Add apps, view them, and remove them. It took me less than five minutes to figure out the basics of the app and learn how it worked. RoboBase Description: If you're a fan of Angry Birds, what's there not to love about this app? It's very similar to how you play Angry Birds, and that's good. You can swipe between birds, or you can even swap out those "weapons" that the other birds have and go with your own arsenal. It's simple, intuitive, and fun. And yes, it's like Angry Birds—but with a twist. The gameplay is simple, you jump around, you fight with birds, and you try to deflect their projectiles. It's probably one of the best games out there. Oh, and if you like using something that's a little more adventurous than just a slingshot, you can shoot exploding birds with cannons. My issue? It costs an astounding $2.99 for a limited time, so if you're buying this for just one of your children, you might just want to skip it. It does have an entire section dedicated to kids, so maybe this one's for you. Alchemy Description: Alchemy is a game that's a combination of Alchemy I and Alchemy II—two fantastic puzzles that really show what a couple of code-crunching puzzle games. The theme of the game is b7e8fd5c8
